For a solid half hour yesterday afternoon an inconspicuous little man in overpany's motor showrooms at Park avenue and Fifty-seventh street. Every now and then he gazed long and wistfully up the avenue. Sometimes, but more rarely. had a glance for Policeman Bill All mendinger, busy directing traffic at the Fifty-seventh street intersection, a hun dred feet or so to the south. The policeman's back was toward the little workman always, for on the downtown side of the street was an obstruction that demanded careful and constant watching.

At length came that for which the watcher had been waiting, a limousine that ran to the curb and halted within a few feet of him. There were two men on the front seat of the machine, one the chanffeur, the other a passenger who ndled on his knees a black satchel

Speedy plot developments ensued.
